FTI Consulting and FD Financial Dynamics
October 2007

Objective:
The objective of this survey is to determine the perspectives of professional advisors and high-net-worth investors on a number of issues relating to corporate governance and corporate reputation.

Methodology:
This survey was conducted online in late August and early September of 2007. 100 professional financial advisors and 102 high-net-worth investors (individuals with over $1 million in investable assets) responded.

Key Findings:
- Respondents believe that boards should be directly involved in the communications around significant events.
- 61% of financial advisors and 62% of high-net-worth investors believe that the board primarily serves shareholders rather than management.
- 13% of financial advisors and 12% of high-net-worth investors believe that corporate governance practices have improved a great deal since the passage of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.
- 67% of financial advisors and 58% of high-net-worth investors believe that companies do not provide enough information to the public about their governance practices.
- 87% of advisors and 88% of high-net-worth investors believe that there is a link between effective corporate governance and a company’s reputation.

Conclusion:
Corporations still have significant strides to make in reassuring investors and their advisors about the effectiveness and quality of corporate governance and whether these practices are appropriately safeguarding corporate reputation.
