Student in the Honors Community live in Slade Hall. In addition to being a strong example of scholar and student in the classroom, Honors residents are able to live and socialize together through this shared residential experience. The Resident Assistants for the Honors Community will develop intentional, interactive programs that are conducive to the success of Honors students in their first year at Bentley University.

“The Honors Program is designed to provide greater challenge and satisfaction to our best students. Students in approximately the top ten percent of the entering class are invited to participate in this four-year program. Student participants can select one or two courses each semester, first in the General Education curriculum and later in their major, that offer an extra intellectual challenge in an intimate, seminar atmosphere. Honors students benefit greatly from getting to know each other and their honors professors more closely than is possible in a larger class, as well as the social and cultural activities developed specifically for students in the Program. Students take at least 9 courses in the Honors Program, capped by a research project of their choosing in the senior year supervised by a faculty member.”

- Aaron Jackson, Director of the Honors Program

“I feel so passionate about my floor because the sense of community is palpable. I have met amazing people who have helped expand both my thoughts and beliefs in ways I never thought possible. I believe that many of these wonderful people will be my friends for the rest of my life.”

- Anthony Romaniello, Bentley ‘18

“Initially, I was a bit concerned about isolating myself by living here, but I quickly found that my concern was ridiculous. Not only did the Honors floor allow me to integrate myself in the campus more so than I would have, but I also noticed that the individuals living around me had similar goals, responsibilities, values, and interests. This allowed for a greater connection with the other residents alongside any other college related activities. This floor definitely augmented my experience!”

- Katherine Hidchenko, Bentley ‘18
